Schedule a Season of Classes in One Step

Class Mass Duplicate turns one well-built class into a whole calendar of them, with the same care your team puts into the first.

The problem it solves

A store that teaches runs the same class again and again: every Saturday morning, the fourth Thursday of the month, the 15th and the 30th. Until now each new date meant copying the class by hand, finding the date field, retyping the time, inventing a SKU and resetting the seats. Repeat that for a season and mistakes creep in: a class on the wrong weekday, a SKU that clashes, a copy that starts with someone else's reserved seats.

What changes

With Class Mass Duplicate an administrator opens a class, chooses Actions > Mass Duplicate Class, and describes the schedule the way they would say it out loud:

- "Every week on Tuesday and Thursday, 12 classes."
- "Every month on the 15th and the 30th, until the end of the year."
- "Every month on the fourth Thursday and the last Saturday, 6 classes."

A small "?" beside the rule reads it back in plain words before anything is created, so there are no surprises. One click later every class is there, each with its own date, its own SKU and an empty seat count, ready to sell.

Built for real calendars

- Dates or weekdays of the month. Teach on fixed dates, or on "the second Monday", without doing calendar arithmetic. Months with five Tuesdays and a 31st that April does not have are handled for you.
- Always forward. New classes start after the ones you already have, and never in the past.
- Clash warnings. If two sessions would land on the same date at the same time, you see them first and decide.
- All or nothing. A run either creates every class or none, so a half-built schedule never reaches the storefront.
- Multi-session classes. A three-evening workshop moves as a unit: every session shifts by the same number of days.

One class, one copy

Sometimes you need just one more: a second section of tomorrow's class because the first filled up. Duplicate Class copies a class sub-product under a new SKU with the same date, time, location and seat count, and zero seats reserved. Other product types get the same action as Duplicate Sub-product.

Why it matters

- Hours of repetitive data entry become a few seconds.
- Fewer errors in dates, times, SKUs and seat counts.
- Seasonal calendars go live sooner, so customers can book sooner.
