Make shipping fit the way you sell

Your shipping policy can reflect the products customers buy and the way your business wants to serve them. Indition Shipping gives your team a practical place to set those charges and keep them consistent at checkout.

Give larger orders a different shipping price

Create whole-order tiers based on the value or number of home-delivery items. For example, charge $12 below $100 and offer free shipping from $100 upward. Shoppers qualify using the shipped items at their cart prices, including sale prices and before coupons or order promotions.

Treat different products differently

Choose categories for a policy shared by a product group, or SKUs when individual items need a particular charge. Use a flat price for every item or group of items, or set tiers that price all covered items together.

Plan a seasonal offer

Use a start and end date to schedule a shipping policy. If the offer belongs to selected stores, choose those stores in the same rule. Your team can review the policy, timing and store coverage together before saving.

Keep the team informed

The rule list shows both the charge and the rule’s current state. The editor’s At checkout summary makes it easier to explain the policy to colleagues and maintain it as your range changes.

A practical first step

Choose one business policy, identify the home-delivery products it should cover, and agree the costs and thresholds. Use the Setup Guide to create the rule, review representative baskets and activate it when your team is ready.
